DEBATE

On Mr. Breckenridge's motion to repeal the all passed last session, for a new organization of the JUDICIARY SYSTEM.

[Mr. Mason, in continuation.]

[Mr. Mason went into an examination of the number of suits depending at the time the law was passed, and particularly the number brought within the twelve months preceding its passage, from the fewness of which, and their being in a state of diminution rather than increase he inferred the inutility of the additional judges.]

He continued: If on this review, we find the number of suits decreasing instead of increasing; if the courts then established were found competent to the prompt and faithful discharge of all the duties devolved upon them, the law was unnecessary; and if unnecessary, the additional expense incurred by it was unnecessary; and all unnecessary expense should be saved. It is true that $5,000 dollars divided among the people of the United States, amounted to but one cent a man; but the principle was still the same. It has been very fashionable of late to justify every unnecessary expense by stating each item by itself and dividing it among the whole people. In this way every expense is held forth as of little consequence! Gentlemen say in this case it is only one cent a man! In the case of the Maudslou, 200,000 dollars came to only a cents a man! In the direct tax, it is only 40 cents! They talk of our army, it only comes to a few cents for each person, who may sell as many cabbages to the soldiers themselves as to pay it! So in a navy. In this way are the most extravagant expenses wiled down to a mere fraction. But this kind of federal arithmetic I can never accede to. It may suit an expensive government; but it is an imposition upon the people.

It has been urged with some force by the gentlemen from New-York and Connecticut that the small number of suits is an evidence of the efficacy and ability of our courts of justice. I am willing to admit the force of this remark; but I must apply it very differently from those gentlemen. I must apply it to the state of dockets when this law passed; & from their being very few at the time, I must infer that the system existing then was an excellent one; as it wielded the power of the laws so effectually, that there was but little necessity for enforcing the law against delinquents.

From the remarks made by the gentleman from Connecticut it might be inferred that we were about to destroy all our courts. Is this the case? Are we contending for breaking down the whole judiciary establishment? On the contrary we barely say the courts you had before the passage of this law, were sufficient; return, therefore, to them. This law which we with repealed, imparts no new authorities to your judges; it clothes them with no additional terrors, it adds not to their axes, or increases not the number of their rods. It only enlarges their number, which was before large enough.

The gentleman from New-York has amused himself with a great deal of handsome rhetoric. But I apprehend without bearing much upon the question. There is one idea, however, which he has seized with extasy, the idea of a great state kneeling at the altar of federal power; and he deprecates that this spectacle, the most sublime that his imagination can conceive, is vanished forever. But if he will consult those stores of history with which he so often amuses and instructs his audience, he will find still more splendid humiliations. He will find the proud monarchs of the east, surrounded with all the decorations of royalty, dragged at the chariot wheel of the conqueror. In more modern times he will behold a King of England and of France, one holding the stirrup and the other the bride, while the Pope mounted his horse.—If not contented with the contemplation of these illustrious degradations, he may resort to sacred writ, to which he so often appeals; and in the very book of judges, he will behold a famous king of Jerusalem, surrounded by three score and ten dependent kings, picking up the crumbs from under his table, and what made the humiliation more charming, all these kings had their thumbs and great toes cut off.

But if the gentleman from New-York wishes to be gratified with a more modern idea of sovereign degradation, I would refer him to the memorable threat of an individual, a servant of the people, to humble a whole state, a great state too, in dust and ashes. A state upon her knees before six venerable judges, decorated in party-colored robes, as ours formerly were, or arrayed in more solemn black, such as that they have lately assumed, hoping, though a state, that it might have some chance for justice, exhibits a spectacle of humble and degraded sovereignty far short of the dreadful denunciation to which I allude! If the gentleman feels, as I know many do, rapture at the idea of a state being humiliated and tumbled into the dust, I envy him not his feelings. At such a thought I acknowledge I feel humbled. If the degradation were confined to kings and tyrants, to usurpers who had destroyed the liberties of nations, I should not feel much commiseration; but when applied to governments, instituted by the people for the protection of their liberties, and administered only to promote their happiness, I feel indignant at the idea of degraded sovereignty. I should feel the same interest for any state, large or small, whether it were the little state of Delaware herself, or the still more insignificant republic of St. Marino.

After a few additional remarks, and asking the indulgence of the house for the want of method imposed upon him from the necessity of replying to the arguments of gentlemen as they had stated them, General Mason sat down.

Mr. STONE, of North-Carolina. The importance of the present question might I presume justify any member in delivering his sentiments without apology. But from the able manner in which the subject has already been discussed, I should have been induced to adhere to my usual course since I have been a member of this body, and leaving its elucidation to others of greater experience and more talents, have been contented with a silent voice. As however, the state whose servant I am, and whose faithful servant I wish at all times to be found, has intrusted her members on this subject, I will endeavor in the plain way of which alone I am capable to assign the reasons for my vote. And in doing this, I rather wish than hope that I may state any thing worthy the consideration of this enlightened assembly.

The argument upon this question has naturally divided into two parts, the one of expediency—the other of constitutionality. If the repeal of this law shall be deemed expedient; the Senate will doubtless consider it their duty to repeal it; but if it shall be deemed unconstitutional to repeal it, then no considerations of expediency can stand in the way of that solemn instrument, we are all sworn to support.

Before entering into an examination of the expediency of the repeal, it may be proper to remark that gentlemen who have spoken against the repeal, whose talents and eloquence I highly admire, have not correctly stated the question. The true question is, not whether we shall deprive the people of the United States of all their courts of justice; but whether we shall restore to them their former courts. Shall we, or shall we not, continue an experiment made, or attempted to be made, I will not say improperly, because my respect for this body and for my country forbid the imputation; but I will say that the length of time we remained without this system, and the repeated ineffectual attempts made to establish it, present strong reasons for inferring that there are not those great apparent reasons in favor of it that have been stated. A system, somewhat similar to the present, had been rejected by the legislature because they preferred the former system. Another evidence to the same purport is, that during the last session when the subject was again revived, and the present plan adopted, an amendment was offered, to amend by extending and enlarging the former establishment.

[Here Mr. Stone read the amendment proposed, which augmented the number of judges of the Supreme Court, and assigned their circuits.]

This amendment was rejected, and from the vote entered on the journal of that day, it appears that the difference of votes against the amendment was formed of those gentlemen, who were nominated to appointments made vacant by the promotion under the new law, I do not state this circumstance as an evidence that these gentlemen were influenced by improper motives; but to shew that the manner in which the new system was formed was not calculated to establish in the public mind a decided preference of it over the old system.

Having made these remarks on the great deliberation said to have been manifested in the adoption of this plan, I hope I may be permitted to express my perfect coincidence with the gentleman from Connecticut, that courts are necessary for the administration of justice, and that without them our laws would be a dead letter.

But it appears to me essential to the due administration of justice, that those who preside in our courts should be well acquainted with the laws which are to guide their decisions. And I apprehend that no way is so much calculated to impart this knowledge as a practical acquaintance with them by attending courts in the several states, and hearing gentlemen, who are particularly acquainted with them, explain and discuss them. It is, therefore, absolutely necessary in my mind, that the judges of the supreme court, whose power controls all the other tribunals, and on whose decisions rest the property, the reputation, the liberty, and the lives of our citizens, should, by riding the circuits, render themselves practically acquainted with their duties. It is well known that the knowledge of the laws of a state is not to be suddenly acquired, and it is reasonable to conclude that that knowledge is most correctly possessed by men whose whole life has been devoted to the acquisition. It is also perfectly well known that the knowledge of the modes and principles of practice in the different states, or of any state, is most effectually to be acquired in courts where gentlemen of skill and experience apply those principles to use upon existing points.

This defect then, of the present plan is in my opinion, so radical, that of itself it would decide with me the question of expediency.

With regard to the expense of this new system, I will say that it weighs as much as it is worth. The single consideration of an expenditure of 30,000 dollars may not be deemed of much importance, when weighed with the benefits derived from an administration of justice over this extensive country. If this great object can be better effected with the additional expense, then it is proper to consider whether the amelioration is worth the price; but if it is not better effected, it surely cannot be the wish of any gentleman to incur a useless expense. If, when this law passed, the business, to the transaction of which the old courts were fully competent, was lessening, then surely there was no occasion for additional tribunals.

The more important consideration involves the constitutional question. Can we, according to that sacred instrument, repeal this law, and destroy the offices created by it? If we cannot, I hope the Senate will reject the proposition on your table.—But if we can, as on examination I think we may, I trust that resolution will be adopted.

The gentleman from Kentucky, who introduced this subject, has so fully and forcibly stated that part of the argument which establishes, that the office of judge being declared by the constitution to be during good behavior, must evidently apply to existing offices, and not to contest the power of the legislature in doing away offices, that I shall not touch it.

I have taken a view of the constitution, which though new in this argument, appears to me to be correct and conclusive. The 4th section of the 2d article of the constitution declares that "the President, the Vice-President and all civil officers of the United States, shall be removed from office on impeachment for, and conviction of treason, bribery or other high crimes and misdemeanors."

This section being added to the article establishing the executive power, evidently operates as a restriction and curb to that power—to prevent the President, Vice-President or any officer in the appointment of the President from remaining in office, when, in the opinion of the legislature, the public good requires them to be displaced. The practical construction put upon this article in connection with other parts of the constitution, is, that all officers in the appointment of the President may be removed at his will; but that those officers, together with himself and Vice-President, shall be removed upon impeachment and conviction by the legislature. No part of the constitution expressly gives the power of removal to the President; but a construction has been adopted and practiced upon from necessity, giving him that power in all cases in which he is not expressly restrained from the exercise of it. The judges afford an instance in which he is expressly restrained from removal. It being declared by the 1st section of the 3d article of the constitution, that the judges both of the supreme & inferior courts shall hold their offices during good behavior.—They doubtless shall (as against the President's power to retain them in office) in common with other officers of his appointment, be removed from office by impeachment & conviction; but it does not follow that they may not be removed by other means. They shall hold their offices during good behavior, and they shall be removed from office upon impeachment and conviction of treason, bribery and other high crimes and misdemeanors. If the word impeachment of high crimes and misdemeanors, be understood according to any construction of them hitherto received and established, it will be found that although a judge guilty of high crimes and misdemeanors, is always guilty of misbehavior in office, yet that of the various species of misbehavior in office, which may render it exceedingly improper that a judge should continue in office, many of them are neither treason, nor bribery, nor can they properly be dignified by the appellation of high crimes and misdemeanors. And for the impeachment of which no precedent can be found; nor would the words of the constitution justify such impeachment. To what source then shall we resort for a knowledge of what constitutes this thing called misbehavior in office? The constitution surely did not intend that a circumstance so important as the tenure by which the judges hold their offices, should be incapable of being ascertained. Their misbehavior certainly is not an impeachable offence; still it is the ground upon which the judges are to be removed from office. The proofs of impeachment, therefore, cannot be the only one by which the judges may be removed from office, under the constitution. I take it, therefore, to be a thing undeniable that there resides somewhere in the government a power to declare what shall amount to misbehavior in office by the judges, and to remove them from office for the same without impeachment. The constitution does not prohibit their removal by the legislature, who have the power to make all laws necessary and proper for carrying into execution the powers vested by the constitution in the government of the United States. But, says the gentleman from New-York, the judges are officers instituted by the constitution to save the people from their greatest enemies, themselves—and therefore they should be entirely independent of, and beyond the controul of the legislature.—If such was the design of those wise men who framed and adopted the constitution, can it be presumed they would have provided for ineffectual a barrier as these judges can readily be shown to be? It is allowed on all hands, the legislature may modify the courts—they may add judges; they may fix the times at which the courts shall sit, &c. Suppose the legislature to have interlarded distinct from people—and the judges to stand in the way of executing any favorite measure. Can any thing be more easy than for the legislature to declare that the courts instead of being held semi-annually, or oftener, shall be held only once in six, eight, ten, or twenty years; or in order to free themselves from the opposition of the present Supreme Court to declare, that court shall hereafter be held by thirteen judges. An understanding between the President and the Senate would make it practicable to fill the new offices with men of different views and opinions from those now in office.—And what, in either case, would become of this boasted protection of the people against themselves. I cannot conceive the constitution intended to feeble a barrier—a barrier to easily evaded.

What danger is there to the people from the legislature which the courts can control? The means of oppression nearest at hand to the legislature, and which afford the strongest temptation to their use, are, the raising extravagant and unnecessary sums of money, and the embodying large and useless armies.—Can the courts oppose effectual checks to these powers? I presume not. The constitution permits their exercise to any extent within the discretion of the legislature.

The objects of courts of law, as I understand them, are, to settle questions of right between suitors—to enforce obedience to the laws—and to protect the citizens against the oppressive use of power in the executive officers.—Not to protect them again the legislature; for that I think I have shewn to be impossible with the powers which the legislature may safely use and exercise; and because the people have retained in their own hands the power of controlling and directing the legislature, by their immediate and mediate elections of President, Senate and House of Representatives.

It is not alone the sixteen rank and file, which the gentleman from New-York has so ludicrously depicted, that I apprehend immediate danger from, but it is the principle which converts the office of judge into an hospital of incurables, and declares that an expiring faction after having lost the public confidence, may add to these 16 until they become 1600, or 16,000; and that the reformed good sense of the legislature, the whole government and constitution retains no means of calling them off, but by destroying itself and resorting to revolutionary principles.—The legislature may repeal unnecessary taxes, may disband useless and expensive armies, may declare they will no longer be bound by the stipulations of an oppressive treaty; and if war should follow the constitution is still safe. But if the constitution which gentlemen contend for be correct, a band of dupes to any amount in number under denomination of the judges, may prey upon the substance of the people, and the government retains not the power to remove them but by destroying the constitution itself.

I believe this enlightened assembly to pause before they adopt a constitution capable of producing to great mischief, and to ineffectual to the ends proposed.

The question is not now, as it would seem from the arguments of gentlemen, they understand it to be; whether we shall abolish offices without compensating the officers for the sacrifices they may have made. If a proposal to compensate them shall be brought forward, the legislature will surely do what honor and justice shall require.

If I possessed equal powers of speech with the gentleman from Connecticut, I might be tempted to make as impressive an address to the feelings of the Senate. Sure I am, I feel as deep an interest in, and solicitude for the constitution, as that gentleman. I view it with him as the bond of our union and the foundation of our safety. But it must be supported on reasonable and practical grounds. My understanding is incapable of seeing how the absurdities and evils of the constitution contended for, can be avoided. I hope therefore that the power of the legislature to put down as well as to build up, courts of justice, as the public good may require, will be established.

Not having accustomed myself to deliver my sentiments in this or the other branch of the legislature, I may not have comprised them in so short a compass, nor in such orderly shape, as would be proper in submitting them to this enlightened assembly. If, however, I have succeeded in stating intelligibly the grounds of my conviction, I am satisfied. If my remarks have contributed to elucidate the subject to others, I shall rejoice; but if failing in this, they also are mixed with error, I trust gentlemen will set them right.

Mr. OLcott, of New-Hampshire, said this subject was of the most important kind, and though many able arguments had been already offered, he could not pass it over with a negative vote.

It has been suggested that the act now proposed to be repealed, came in on the influx of passion, and that the influx of reason should sweep it away.—He did not know that this was the case. Some gentlemen contend that it was adopted with great deliberation.

He thought the reasons for a repeal of this law insufficient. It is not said, that if the constitution vests a right to office in the judges, that we can affect them. He thought the constitution did vest the right, and he held it to be sacred.

The provisions of the constitution appeared to him to plain, that they scarcely admitted of illustration. He who undertakes to explain the text must find more explicit terms than those contained in it. He could not find any.

After dwelling upon the different provisions of the constitution, Mr. Olcott went upon the question of expediency at some length, and concluded that a repeal was as inexpedient as unconstitutional.

Mr. COcke, of Tennessee, followed Mr. Olcott. He said he was sorry gentlemen attempted to make quick doctors of them, by laying we may give a wound, but cannot heal it. He wished the Senate to enquire whether the law now proposed to be repealed was constitutional or not. If it was not, we should act like honest men, acknowledge that we have violated the constitution, and restore it to its purity by repealing the law. Let us recur to the Journals of 1799, and see what was the understanding of these champions of our liberties, and whether they have not since changed. The Journals would prove that the judges were to mix with the legislature, were to be locked up in a closet, and to declare who was to be our executive magistrate.

[Mr. Cocks went into an examination of the arguments on the constitutional point.]

We have been told that the nation is to look up to these immaculate judges to protect their liberties—to protect the people against themselves. This was novel, and what result did it lead to? He thundered to think of it. Were there none of these judges ready to plunge their swords in the American heart? He did not think it proper to be alarmed by the terrors held out. He wished to know no man; to take things as they are. But if gentlemen will attack, they must expect reply.

Mr. Cocks then dilated upon the several points of the discussion and concluded with the expression of the hope that the legislature would repeal the law, and that they would not give way to the ideas of gentlemen that the government was made for a chosen few—for the judges to whom we are to look up for every thing.

Mr. MORRIS.—Mr. President, I had fostered the hope that some gentleman who thinks with me, would have taken upon himself the task of replying to the observations made yesterday, and this morning, in favor of the motion on your table. But since no gentleman has gone to fully into the subject as it seems to require, I am compelled to request your attention.

We were told yesterday, by the honorable member from Virginia, that our objections were calculated for the bystanders, and made with a view to produce effect upon the people at large. I know not for whom this charge is intended. I certainly recollect no such observations. As I was personally charged with making a play upon words, it may have been intended for me. But surely, sir, it will be recollected that I declined that paltry game, and declared that I considered the verbal criticism which had been relied on, as irrelevant. If I can recollect what I said from recollecting well what I thought, and meant to say, sure I am that I uttered nothing in the title of an appeal to the people.—I hope no member of this house has so poor a sense of its dignity as to make such an appeal. As to myself I am now near thirty years since I was called into public office. During that period I have frequently been the servant of the people, always their friend; but at no moment of my life their flatterer, and God forbid that I ever should be. When the honorable gentleman considers the course we have taken, he must feel that the observation he has thus pointed can light on no object. I trust that it did not flow from a consciousness of his own intentions. He, I hope had no view of this sort. If he had he was much, very much mistaken. Had he looked round upon those who honor us with their attendance, he would have seen that the splendid flashes of his wit excited no approbatory smiles. The countenances of those by whom we were surrounded presented a different spectacle. They were impressed with the dignity of this house; they perceived in it the dignity of the American people, and felt with high and manly sentiment their own participation.

We have been told, sir, by the honorable gentleman from Virginia, that there is no independent part of this government. That in popular governments the form of every department, as well as the government itself, must depend upon popular opinion. And the honorable member from North-Carolina has informed us that there is no check for the overbearing powers of the legislature but public opinion; and he has been pleased to notice a sentiment I had uttered. A sentiment which not only fell from my lips, but which flowed from my heart. I have, however, been misunderstood and misapplied. After reminding the house of the dangers to which popular governments are exposed from the influence of designing demagogues upon popular passion, I took the liberty to say, that we, the Senate of the United States, are assembled here to save the people from their most dangerous enemy, to save them from themselves; to guard them against the baneful effects of their own precipitation, their passion, their misguided zeal.

'Tis for these purposes that all our constitutional checks are devised. If this be not the language of the constitution, the constitution is all nonsense. For why are the Senators chosen by communities, and the representatives directly by the people? Why are the one chosen for a longer term than the other? Why give one branch of the legislature a negative upon the acts of the other? Why give the President a right to arrest the proceedings of both till two thirds of each should concur? Why all these multiplied precautions, unless to check and control that iniquitous spirit, that headlong torrent of opinion, which has swept away every popular government that ever existed?

With most respectful attention I heard the declaration of the gentleman from Virginia, of his own sentiment. "Whatever" said he, "may be my opinion of the constitution, I hold myself bound to respect it." He disdained, sir, to profess an affection he did not feel, and I accept his candor as a pledge for the performance of his duty.—But he will admit this necessary inference from that frank confession, that although he will struggle (against his inclination) to support the constitution, even to the last moment, yet, when in spite of all his efforts it shall fall, he will rejoice in its destruction. Far different are my feelings.—It is possible that we are both prejudiced; and that in taking the ground on which we respectively stand our judgments are influenced by the sentiments which glow in our hearts. I, sir, will to support this constitution because I love it. And I love it because I consider it as the bond of our union; because in my soul I believe that on it depends our harmony and our peace; that without it we should soon be plunged in all the horrors of civil war; that this country would be deluged with the blood of its inhabitants; and a brother's hand be raised against the bosom of a brother.

After these preliminary remarks, I hope I shall be indulged while I consider the subject in reference to the two points which have been taken, the expediency and constitutionality of the repeal.

For the information of those who wish to make INSURANCE.

APPLICATION for insurance must be accompanied with a certificate, specifying the length and width of the vessel or boat, the cable, stern-fast, number of oars, pump and canoe or skiff, the number of hands, &c. which ought to be given by persons who are judges, and who are disinterested reputable men.

A bill of lading, signed by the captain, or a manifest signed by the inspector, which shall specify the whole of the cargo on board, or to be put on board—it must also state where the boat or vessel lies—where the will take in her cargo when she will take her departure; or if she has failed, the time when, and the port to which she is bound; and if any information has been received from her since she failed, it must be communicated. The insurance does not commence until the vessel is under way, on her intended voyage and the premium paid.

In all cases of loss, if practicable, a survey must be made by disinterested men, who are to state in writing, what in their opinion is necessary to be done, for the interest of the parties concerned; as also a protest to be entered by the captain on oath, in which the hands must join, stating particularly the loss, where and how it happened, and what cargo was then on board.

In case a boat or vessel be lost, it is the duty of the captain and hands, to use all possible means to recover the whole or as much as possible, of the cargo, for which labor and expence, the insurers will pay their proportionable part.

No boat which is insured, must attempt to pass the Falls of the Ohio, without taking a pilot on board.

Any shipper, who intends to tarry at any port or place on the voyage, for the benefit of trading, or other purposes, must have an article to that effect, inserted in the policy of insurance.

Lexington, March 12.

We have information from a source we deem authentic, that no exchange of Louisiana for part of St. Domingo, had taken place on the 31st of December last, between France and Spain; nor was such an exchange at that time contemplated, between those nations. We may therefore rationally conclude, that the present armament destined to St. Domingo from France, is not only to suppress any opposition to the French government, but also to strengthen and fortify that Island against future dangers.

In the House of Representatives, of the U. S. Feb. 18th, 1802, the following report was made by the Committee of Commerce and Manufactures, to whom was referred the petition of THOMAS WALLACE and others, citizens of Kentucky, praying that additional protecting duties may be laid on Hemp, Cordage and Sail Duck, imported from foreign nations,

REPORT—

That your committee have in a former report recommended additional duties on tarred and untarred cordage and yarn; so that the duty payable hereafter may be two cents per lb. on tarred, and two and a half cents per lb. on untarred cordage—That the present duty on hemps twenty-two dollars and forty cents per ton; on fail duck twelve and a half per cent; ad valorem—That the duty on hemp is about twenty per cent. on its prime cost in Europe, which is equal to any protecting duty heretofore laid by law, or now recommended by your committee. The committee are apprehensive that the laying of higher duties on those articles would have a tendency to induce our ship owners to equip their ships in foreign countries, to the great injury of the petitioners, and such other citizens of the U. S. as may have engaged in the culture of hemp, or its manufacture into cordage or sail duck.

The committee are therefore of opinion, that it would not be expedient to impose further duties on hemp or fail duck.

BY YESTERDAY'S MAIL.

WASHINGTON CITY, Feb. 25.

De Witt Clinton, is chosen Senator of the United States, in the room of genl. Armstrong, resigned. He had 82 votes; and Mr. Clarkson 45. Mr. Clinton is, and ever has been, an unequivocal republican.

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, February 17, 1802.

Mr. Southard presented a memorial from certain countessors of law, of the state of New-Jersey, praying that the law for the repeal of the judiciary system of the last session, may not pass—Referred.

A message was received from the president of the United States, enclosing a report from the Directors of the Mint; and statements in relation to the Barbary Powers, containing accounts of all the expences incurred with them since the commencement of the government.

The House went into a committee of the whole on the judiciary bill: when Messrs. Thompson, Davis and Bacon spoke in favor of the repeal, and Mr. Thomas Morris against the repeal of the law of the last session.

THURSDAY, February 18, 1802.

Several memorials from citizens of Philadelphia were presented, praying that the judiciary law of the last session may be repealed.

The House then resolved itself into a committee of the whole on the judiciary bill, when Mr. Stanly spoke against, and Mr. Giles in favor of the repeal.

On Friday Mr. Bayard occupied the whole of the day, without concluding his remarks, which he closed on Saturday about 3 o'clock; when Mr. Randolph spoke till nearly 5 o'clock; when the House adjourned to Tuesday, on the intimation of the speaker, that a day would be required to have a ventilator put up.

To induce the House to adjourn to that day, Mr. Bayard stated that Monday was the birth day of Wallington.

In the House of Representatives the discussion of the bill from the Senate, on the Judiciary was on Tuesday continued. Mr. Huger spoke against, and Mr. Macdon for the bill.

When at 3 o'clock a motion was made that the committee rise, and ask leave to sit again.

Mr. Gregg said he hoped the committee would not rise. He said it must be evident to every gentleman that the subject was exhausted; and other business of importance claimed the attention of the house.

Messrs. Goddard, Bacon and Nicholson, supported the rising of the committee. The motion to rise was carried.—Yeas, 60.

CHILLICOTHE, March 6.

Letters were received from Washington City, by last night's mail, to the 22d ult. but contain nothing very interesting. Congress had been eight days engaged on the Judiciary bill, and it was expected that it would not be gone through within less than ten days more. Very little other business was, or would be attended to, until it was finally determined.

From the New-Torh Gazette.

Captain Wallon informs, that just before he sailed from Charleston, the ship Sisters, Picket, arrived there from Liverpool, from which the failed on the first of January. The news by this ship was of importance, but was not published when captain W. failed. But there was a great talk at Charleston of a prospect of the renewal of hostilities, in some quarter. He did not, however learn particulars.

From the Baltimore Federal Gazette of Tuesday.

"Captain Houston informs, that previous to his sailing, the definitive treaty was signed, and a number of English soldiers had arrived in the ports, but not permitted to discharge until some commercial points were settled. Several ships of war had failed from Brest to the West-Indies; the troops it was said would not fail before April."

A PRAYER IN THE PROSPECT OF DEATH.

By Robert Burns.

O Thou unknown, slightly cause
Of all my hope and fear!
In whose dread presence, ere an hour,
Perhaps I must appear!

If I have wander'd in those paths
Of life I ought to shun;
As something, loudly, in my breast,
Remonstrates I have done.

Thou know'st that thou hast formed me
With passions wild and strong;
And liv'ning to their witching voice
Has often led me wrong.

Where human weakness has come short,
Or frailty iteak apace,
Do thou, all Good for such thou art,
In shades of darkness hide.

Where with intention I have err'd,
No other plea I have,
But, thou art good; and goodness still Delighteth to forgive.

ANECDOTE.

A Clergyman took for the text the following words:—"Vow and pay unto the Lord thy vows." An Indian heard him very attentively, and stepping up to the pulpit, thus accented him:—"I vow I'll go home with you, Mr. Minister." "You must go then," replied the parson. The Indian afterwards vowed to have supper, and then to lay all night. "You may," replied the clergyman: "but I vow, you shall go in the morning."

23 GREAT BARGAINS.
Will be sold by the Subscriber, and for a greater part, Extensive Credits will be given, in annual payments, the purchaser giving good bond and security: The following PROPERTY I will sell, from this day forward, (to wit:)
VALUABLE BUILDINGS, and the Lots of ground they are on, in Paris—they begin at the Main Corner street facing the Court house, and running parallel with the public ground one hundred feet—
The first a large two story frame building, in which there is a large well finished store house and counting room, both large fire places of brick; the other part well calculated for a tavern, six well finished rooms plastered, and four large fire places; another room, thirty-six feet by twenty, and two fire places, and within five feet of the back room door, a brick lodging room, and a kitchen adjoining—The balance of the building of brick two stories high; with four houses, twenty feet square, rented out to different families; convenient to those are two small kitchens—there is a stable and small garden for the use of the large building. I have also nine acres of out lots in excellent order for cultivation—Those buildings were first valued by a number of workmen at eight thousand dollars; and several useful additions have been made to them since—I will now give them extremely low, and give them clear of all incumbrance.
Another property I have in Mafon county, one mile and three quarters from Limestone—two valuable overhott mills, in as high credit for manufacturing flour, as any in the State, and are now repairing and almost done, so as to start to complete order when the season for grinding commences, with the best Burr and Alleghany stones, rolling screens &c.—Those mills in the season for grinding, can make forty barrels of flour every day that they are worked; and any person inclining to purchase, can be informed, that the quality of the flour is superior to any that has been boasted from Limestone. With those I will sell a valuable negro man, a good miller; the plantation of 140 acres, 100 apple trees, of fruit equal to any in the State, a fine clover and blue grass pasture and meadow, a small dwelling house and farm, with other out houses, cherry and peach orchard—the title indisputable; and I will give it clear of all incumbrance. For this property I have in two years paid nine thousand dollars.
I have also for sale, 700 acres of Military land, fourteen miles from Washington, North West of the Ohio river, with a very promising salt lick, supplied to have salt water, a small trial has been made, and some salt made by a Mr. Sherry.
I have also two small plantations in Bourbon, that I will sell—they are mostly first rate land.
I have patents for lands near Montgomery court house, of the first quality; eight thousand acres, the half of which I will sell at one third its value; the purchaser may have his choice; patented 17 years ago; entries very special.
Also the half of 600 acres of first quality, three miles from Fleming court house; old patents and special entries—on the same terms.
I have also one thousand acres for sale, adjoining lower Mackee's tract, level, but of inferior quality—for this I will take good horses at 6s per acre; the title undoubted.
I have also for sale about 300 acres, on Cedar creek, of Floyd's fork, with a never failing spring on it; a part rich land, and a part indifferent, within six miles of Mann's lick; this has excellent range and timber—for this I will take good salt at 12s per acre, if cash 9s per acre.
I have also for sale, six hundred acres, patented land, on Clover lick, eight miles from the Crab orchard—this I will take 3s per acre for in cash, or as 6d in horses.
If it will be an accommodation to those who may incline to purchase the mills, I will give in an excellent house woman, now living in Lexington.
I will also sell a good stock of hogs cattle, mares and colts, with the mills.
I will give such excellent bargains in all, or any of the aforesaid property, that any person inclining to purchase, may be well accommodated. The mills I will deliver up the tenth of March next, or if sooner required, on a little more advance, they shall be given up.
Money, good Merchandise, Negroes, and Horses, will be taken by instalments, as will best suit the purchaser.
Application to my son John Edwards, jun. in Bourbon, or to Mr. David S. Brodick, in Washington, or Mr. Enoch Smith, near Montgomery court house, or James Brown clq. in Lexington, for information and contracts with respect to the property, or to the subscriber, either in Bourbon or Washington, may be made.

Any of my creditors choosing to purchase, shall have on the lowest terms, as I am determined to sell.
I will sell 1000 barrels of flour, all to be delivered before the 15th of March next. And,
I have also one other plantation for sale, near Warwick, 233 acres cleared, and the title secure.
Any person purchasing the mills I will furnish with wheat at cash price, and will, if employed, engage to clear them in the sales of flour &c. this season, 2500 or 3000 dollars.
